DISCLAIMER AND/OR LEGAL NOTICES:

The information in this course has been built from my life and experiences, and it is what works for me. While I have made every effort to translate the decidedly quirky workings of one human mind into a process that will be applicable and accessible to other human minds, I cannot guarantee that this course will work for you, or that my processes will be applicable to your needs and purposes. Nor can I guarantee your success. This course is not intended as a source of legal, accounting, medical or other advice, and is written for information purposes only. While every attempt has been made to verify the information in this course, mistakes happen, and I make them. I will not assume responsibility for errors, inaccuracies, or omissions. I reserve the right to alter and update this course as my processes change, as I learn new things, and as I improve existing methods.

ACTIVITY, and Why

This week includes doing some novel long-game planning, and in general, you're going to want to pull out these worksheets AFTER you've introduced all your characters and have written about the first five scenes/chapters.

You're getting this at Lesson 17 because this is an intermediate technique, and we had to build the groundwork for you to build on this time through

So in writing your first novel with the class, you'll be starting LATE with story planning.

For future novels, watch your word-count, and when you have around 12,000 to 15,000 words written, pull out these worksheets and build a light story outline.

And have some fun today.

You've got this.

Holly

THE LIST: Write down the elements in your existing chapters that you'll need to update (U) in revision, and that you need to focus on in future chapters (F).
